
100 Million Smartphone Owners in China Getting Free VoIP

Monday, 09 July 2012

Do you know that there are over 100 million smartphone users in China alone? Also, do you know that these 100 million smartphone users in China will be getting a free VoIP service soon, through an app called Weixin, which is built based on the Android and iOS operating system?

Surely, Weixin will be joining the ranks of Skype, Viber, and Korea's renowned Kakao Talk, when it comes to providing free mobile phone calls within the nation, and I'm confident that the company would definitely make a huge impact on the 100 million smartphone users in China. Apparently, the respective company will be adding a Bluetooth support soon too, which matches the VoIP web service.
